Report on

Orientation for students on "MOODLE"

A 1- Day Program was organised by the IQAC at Vignan's Institute of Engineering For Women, Visakhapatnam on 27th September 2021.

Moodle is a free and open source Learning Management System. It is completely Web-based, no software to install. Let's teachers create course websites and lets students access them. Course websites can contain class notes, audio/video files, quizzes, assignments, discussion forums, and much more. Modular object-oriented dynamic learning environment. Free and open-source software is software that is liberally licensed to grant users the right to use, copy, study, change, and improve its design through the availability of its source code.

Program Team:

Resource Person: Mr M. Rama Krishna Murthy

Senior Faculty in Math for JEE prep(Main and Advanced)

Hyderabad, Telangana, India.

Patron: Dr J. Sudhakar, Principal

Convener: Dr Akansha Mishra, Dean, IQAC

Number of Participants: 54 Members(20- Faculty, 34- Students)

Resource Person Overview:

Mr. M. Rama Krishna Murthy, senior faculty said that MOODLE is essentially a website that has a number of templates and resources that can be used and adapted as required. At a simple level it makes it easy for those people with no experience of creating websites to place resources online for sharing.

Moodle has been designed to support social constructivist models of learning. The first learning module describes this in some detail.

Moodle can be used for the different needs of different people. Here are some ways in which it can be used:

- to share resources, online ... 24/7 availability.
- to enable communication ... forums, chat, messaging.
- to add interactivity ... quizzes, communication tools, learning objects.
- to enable collaboration ... wikis, the glossary and database tools.
- to allow for distance learning ... available on the web.

PRINCIPAL
Vignan's Institute of Engineering for Women
K.J.Peta, VSEZ (P.O.),
Visakhapatnam-49.

- to support blended learning ... used in conjunction with traditional face to face teaching.
- to reduce teacher workload ... online assignment submission and marking, self-marking quizzes.

About the Program:

A learning management system (LMS) is an application for the administration, documentation, tracking, reporting and delivery of education courses or training programs.

An LMS should be able to:

- automate administration
- use self-service and self-guided services – (buffet type service)
- assemble and deliver learning content
- consolidate educational programmes
- support both synchronous and asynchronous learning
- personalize content and enable knowledge reuse
- deliver online training.

Your instructor may choose to show only one topic or week at a time, all content, or make only specific topics available to you at any given time. The content layout is decided by the instructor and so every course will be different. However, the Moodle elements contained in each course will be the same such as quizzes, forums (discussions), and homework submissions.

The areas on the left and right side of the course are called “Blocks”. Each course may contain different blocks, but the most common blocks include: Activities My Courses People Administration.

The Participants link located in the People block lists all of the students and instructors enrolled in the course. You can click a name link to access another user’s profile. To see your instructor’s profile and contact information, select Instructor from the Current role drop-down box, and then click on the appropriate link to access his/her profile.

Although it is recommended that you follow the guidelines that your instructor provides for the course, in addition to the front page content links, you may also access Resources and Activities from the Activities block. The content of the Activities block is dependent upon the activities in the course. Common activities include: Assignments: projects, papers, and other activities assigned by your instructor Forums: News forums, Announcements, Discussion forums Quizzes: Lists the quizzes and tests in your course. Resources: Lists of course prepared files and resources by the instructor (syllabus, checklists, lecture materials, etc.)

Report on

Orientation program on "Experiential and Peer Learning"

A 1- Day Program was organised by the IQAC at Vignan's Institute of Engineering For Women, Visakhapatnam on 07th February, 2022.

Part of an on-going research project on inter-year team-working in design education, this paper looks at the cumulative effect of consecutive group projects as a learning experience. Design process today places emphasis on multidisciplinary teams and in this context designers need to be particularly skilled for collaborative working, perhaps becoming facilitators and teamwork experts. The inter-year teamwork format seems valuable in giving students experience of heterogeneous team working; managing different backgrounds, different knowledge levels and different approaches. We present aspects of experiential and peer learning most clearly identified by this student cohort and discuss insights that may be useful for improving teaching input in project based teamwork contexts.

Program Team:

Resource Person: Dr. M.V.S.Sairam

Professor & Dean, Academics (UG), GVPCE(A).

Patron: Dr J. Sudhakar, Principal

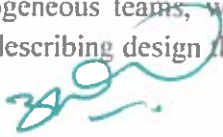

Convener: Dr Akansha Mishra, Dean, IQAC

Number of Participants: 62 Members (20- Faculty, 42- Students)

Resource Person Overview:

Our research focuses on Inter-Year team projects carried out by students from their 3rd to 5th year of design studies. During their third year of study, students will work on two consecutive five month long projects in heterogeneous teams of 3 to 6 students. The teams include students of different year groups, the first project combining 3rd and 5th year students, and the second combining 3rd and 4th year students. After these two long team projects which represent one day a week of in-school study and tutorial time, students will spend the first half of their 4th year in internships before returning to the school and working in two more long team projects, this time as senior members, once at the end of their 4th year and then at the start of their fifth year. Nearly all of these projects run with an external industrial or research partner. Previous research on this cumulative study model seemed to show that these team projects progressively equip students for working in heterogeneous teams, which if proved - would seem to be a valuable skill for design students. attributes, the horizontal bar represents one's ability to connect with others and use the other's expert knowledge. Cross functional teams are needed today due to the complex nature of developing high volume products which now involves an increasing number of specialists who must work together.

About the Program:

Experiential learning is described as the process whereby knowledge is created through the transformation of experience. Experiential learning also has a long history in the context of team working. Members of a team may separately have one of the four learning styles defined by Kolb, (diverging, assimilating, converging, accommodating) and by reflection and conversation on team experiences, meaningful learning can occur. In replying to our survey we feel that students have probably undergone a process of reflection, identifying experiences that have been transformed into learning. We divide comments into three categories, experiences linked to personal evolution, linked to understanding good team-work practice and comments linked to good team-management practice. In these second two categories numerous comments suggest that students tried to reapply learning in subsequent team projects and in their internships. Many students also directly mention that the experience in one project helped them for the next, with a key point being gaining confidence and understanding what to do in the team, "I had gained autonomy; the fact that I was coached on the preceding project let me know what I should do". We list here the most often mentioned points.

In terms of peer learning, many students identify "tools" and software and sketching skills, particularly in their first long project, where as a third year student they have one or more 5th year "managers". I learnt drawing techniques, 2D and 3D software that I still use today. The other main category mentioned in peer-learning is management, and more specifically organisation and time management, a typical reply; "I discovered what the work of a manager is (organisation, anticipation, calm)". The fact that many students in the school are aware of the importance of team projects seems to generate something close to a tacit contract, where particularly in the first 3rd year project students expect to learn tools and management skills from their 5th year team partners. Many comments in our research reinforce this idea, both positively, and in terms of frustration when this learning has not taken place. The "teaching" aspect of peer learning is also frequently cited as a source of pride, and pleasure in teamwork. Although the school puts in place these opportunities for peer learning, many comments from students suggest that the school's role is not identified, and they feel there is too much reliance on using students to teach other students.

Objectives of Program:

- Attending to the context in which the peer learning strategy is to be introduced.
- Focussing on learning outcomes and objectives and matching these to peer learning strategies.
- Ensuring congruence between the peer learning strategies and assessment tasks.
- Preparing staff and students for different learning approaches, roles and responsibilities.
- Introducing peer learning strategies and managing the process.
- Creating positive conditions for learning.
